Two Senior Business Consultants Will Lead Two New Trissential ERP Specialties

Minneapolis – October 2, 2007 – Trissential, a business improvement and project implementation company, announced today that two senior business consultants have joined the firm to lead its Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) specialties.

Craig Thielen was named director of Trissential's ERP capability. As the head of this area, Thielen will provide executive leadership and program management consulting, oversee quality control on client engagements, grow Trissential's ERP business and capabilities, take an active part in industry forums, and develop articles and presentations on ERP issues.

Thielen has spent the past 16 years leading companies through large-scale and complex ERP strategy development and technology implementations.

His background includes virtually every role required of complex ERP solutions, including technical direction, business process analysis, and project and change management. Thielen is a sought-after speaker on all aspects of ERP. Most recently, he served as a vice president at Fujitsu Consulting.

Cindy Jorgensen was appointed director of the JD Edwards Consulting Practice. In this position, Jorgensen will develop and expand the JD Edwards consulting business area by focusing on acquiring the best talent and providing customers with the highest quality value and services needed in today's business environment.

During her more than 25 years of experience, Jorgensen has held a variety of leadership positions in multi-site manufacturing, insurance, and information technology consulting companies. She is recognized throughout the ERP market as a JD Edwards software implementation and upgrade expert. Jorgensen founded and led the BORN JD Edwards practice, which was one of the most highly regarded practices nationally.

"Every mid-market corporation needs to have the finest minds assisting in short- and long-term ERP strategy development," said Keith Korsi, principal and co-founder of Trissential. "Craig Thielen is one of those people you want on your ERP team at the strategy and planning level.

"For those companies looking to move to a JD Edwards software implementation or upgrade, then Cindy Jorgensen offers unparalleled experience.
