Trissential Hires Three New People to Help Support Rapid Growth

Minneapolis, June 9, 2008 — Trissential, a business improvement and project implementation company, announces the hiring of three new staff members to help the company support an anticipated 50 percent increase in headcount by the end of the year.

“We knew it was mandatory to add resources now so that our infrastructure would more than adequately support the anticipated growth later this year and maintain the exceptional level of service clients associate with Trissential,” said Cindy Jorgensen, director of operations.

To ensure that the company’s project managers, IT professionals, and business analysts have a fulltime resource for fast, accurate information on client particulars, the company created the position of staff manager. Staff manager Tamara Pechtel will be the point of contact for policies and procedures, engagement details, and employee relations. Pechtel will also serve as an internal advocate for consultants. She has held a range of human resource, staff management, and recruiting positions at such companies as Eagle Creek Software Services, Spherion, RCM Technologies, and Talent Software Services. Pechtel belongs to the Human Resources Professional Association and the Society for Human Resource Management.

Trissential hired Christian Lewis as its newest recruiter to source, screen, and qualify applicants. Her focus is on recruiting candidates for the JD Edwards practice. Lewis has held recruiting positions at such companies as Eagle Creek Software Services, MinuteClinic, and Hyrian.

To better serve the entrepreneurial and fast-paced Madison, Wisconsin, market, where the company has experienced a significant spike in business over the past year, Trissential hired John Keating to become its first director of business development, Madison. Keating has demonstrated business development expertise in the areas of IT, business process improvement, and enterprise resource planning (ERP). All three are Trissential areas of service.
