Trissential Announces New Hires and a Promotion

Minneapolis – April 20, 2009 – Trissential, a business improvement and project implementation company, announced today that it hired a new controller and staff manager. The company also announced the promotion of Stephen Beise to director of the Minnesota Project Portfolio Management Practice.

Beise, who has been with the firm since 2006, is now responsible for overseeing the success of all of Trissential's Minnesota project portfolio management engagements and for the leadership of Trissential's team of senior project management consultants.

"Steve exhibits drive, enthusiasm, and consummate skill," said Michael Vinje, principal and co-founder. "Trissential is going to successfully manage growth by grooming people of the caliber of Steve Beise to become the firm's next generation of leaders."

Beise came to Trissential from The Hartford, where he was a project/program manager. He has worked for such companies as John Ryan Company, Captive Communications, and Old Republic. Beise is a graduate of Cardinal Stritch University and holds an Associates Certificate in Project Management from George Washington University.

John Travis is the firm's new controller. In this role he is responsible for supervising accounting, financial reporting, and business forecasting. Travis comes to Trissential after serving as a consultant for GMAC RESCAP, Caribou Coffee, Lawson Software, TCF Bank, and Robert Half Management Resources. Travis has been employed by J. Walter Thompson, Moneygram/Travelers Express, and US Bank. He graduated from St. Olaf College.

Kelli Mack is a new staff manager at Trissential — the firm now has two staff managers due to its steady growth. She will work closely with Trissential project managers, IT professionals, and business analysts, ensuring they have required information on client expectations and the particulars of each engagement. She will be a point of contact for consultants concerning policies and procedures and will be an internal advocate for consultants. Additionally, she will serve as employee programs manager, overseeing health benefits. She comes to Trissential from DigiNeer, where she was a resource manager. She has worked for such companies as Prostaff, Born Information Services, and Dynamark. She is a graduate of the University of St. Thomas.
