Jorgensen and Thielen Named Trissential Principals

Minneapolis – May 4, 2009 – Trissential, a management consulting firm focused on business improvement, announced today that based on their contribution to the firm’s significant growth last year, Cindy Jorgensen and Craig Thielen have been made principals and have become members of its management committee.

“Cindy and Craig brought us a business plan for JD Edwards and enterprise application practices that meshed perfectly with Trissential’s business model,” said Keith Korsi, co-founder and principal. “In little more than a year and a half, Trissential is recognized as the go-to company for consulting in both of those areas and an increasing number of engagements reflect this. Cindy and Craig also contribute a wealth of management expertise that is helping Trissential successfully manage the challenging process of growing from a small to a mid-sized consultancy. We are proud to have named them company principals.”

Jorgensen is the director of Trissential’s JD Edwards Consulting Practice and the firm’s director of shared services. During her more than 27 years of experience, Jorgensen has held a variety of leadership positions in multi-site manufacturing, insurance, and information technology consulting companies. She is recognized throughout the enterprise resource planning (ERP) market as a JD Edwards software implementation and upgrade expert. Jorgensen founded and led the BORN JD Edwards practice, which was one of the most highly regarded nationally.

Thielen is the director of the firm’s Enterprise Applications Practice. Thielen has spent the past 18 years leading companies through large-scale and complex ERP strategy development and technology implementations. His background includes virtually every role required of complex ERP solutions, including technical direction, business process analysis, and project and change management. Thielen is a sought-after speaker on all aspects of ERP. Most recently, he served as a vice president at Fujitsu Consulting.
