Trissential Named a 2011 Top Workplace by the Star Tribune

Consultancy again recognized as an outstanding place to work

MINNEAPOLIS (June 20, 2011)—The Star Tribune newspaper

announced Sunday that Trissential – a business improvement consultancy – was named one of the 100 Top Workplaces in Minnesota. This accomplishment adds to Trissential’s 2009 and 2010 designations as a “Best Place to Work” by Minneapolis/St. Paul Business Journal.

Top Workplaces recognizes the most progressive companies in Minnesota based on employee opinions about company leadership, communication, career opportunities, workplace environment, managerial skills, pay and benefits. The analysis included responses from over 60,500 employees at Minnesota organizations.

“We’re thrilled with this achievement,” said Michael Vinje, principal and co-founder of Trissential. “From the beginning, our goal was to create the company we always wanted to work for – a top workplace. The feedback received through this employee survey process is confirmation we are realizing our company mission and vision. We are very proud of our team.”

Star Tribune Publisher Michael J. Klingensmith said, “The companies in the Star Tribune Top 100 Workplaces deserve high praise for creating the very best work environments in the state of Minnesota. My congratulations to each of these exceptional companies.”

“With an average of 22 years business experience under their belts, our Essentialists have seen the inside of hundreds of organizations. That they continue to share our passion for improvement speaks volumes about our consulting model and the high-value, remarkable work we’re doing with clients,” said Keith Korsi, who along with Michael Vinje is principal and co-founder of Trissential.
